Remembering Mahmoud Darwish: Poetry and the Poet in National Narrative

Abstract This study examines the discourse of commemoration that has been constructed around Mahmoud Darwish, exploring ways in which memory and symbolic capital are appropriated by the collectivity and reproduced in public life so as to sustain collective boundaries. The following source-groups are analysed: (a) physical ceremonial acts (b) obituarial texts from Arabic and English-language newspapers, (c) literary and academic responses. These variously show how the reinforcement of identity is inscribed in the rituals and ideology of commemoration.

*I am not mine
I am not mine*

As is revealed by the metaphysics of 'Mural'¹, Mahmoud Darwish himself was perhaps the one most acutely conscious of the expropriability of that self. The discord and incommensurability between his private self and the idealised identity bestowed upon him
